

The Mailman, the Florist, the Taxi Driver and Irritable Bowel Syndrome

Irritable bowel syndrome is never pleasant for anyone to experience. It can ruin a person's day. Frequent trips to the bathroom, diarrhea, water retention, abdominal cramps, bloating, all of the symptoms of irritable bowel syndrome can just make a person want to stay in bed. Imagine how these problems affect someone who has a job that requires them to be active all day. Image in the postal service letter carrier, the mailman. If the mailman suffers from irritable bowel syndrome how can he do his job delivering the mail? He is out and about all day long, walking to deliver the mail. He doesn't have a convenient bathroom right around the corner. The same holds true for the florist who spends a big part of his day delivering flowers. Image the florist entering a hospital to delivery flowers and having to immediately find a bathroom. Imagine the discomfort and embarrassment the poor florist must feel, and the inconvenience the mailman goes through. Then think about someone who drives all day, like a bus driver or a taxi driver. It is hard to keep a bathroom in your car and very difficult to concentrate on the road and on safety when you have abdominal cramping and pain.
