

Making a Petrifying Entry

Ever wondered how it might be to have a Jekyll and Hyde kind of a transformation? Well, Halloween is one occasion that gives us the chance to do the same. It allows us that one evening in the year when we may transform according to our own wishes and walk the streets without wondering about what others will think. Of course, if our outfits are attention grabbers, there is great fun in watching others stare in envy and admiration.

Of course, getting dressed for Halloween has little to do with finding outfits that match our personality. Rather, the point is to make a statement, and dress in a way that would surprise all those who think they know us. The majority of us tend not to be Frankensteins in our daily lives. Yet, that does not stop us from donning the garb of a Frankenstein monster to announce your entry at the big costume party.

Costume rental stores are the biggest winners around Halloween. There is always a mad rush for witch costumes, mummy costumes, and the like. Those who start looking for their Halloween costumes a little too late usually end up with costumes that make no impact at all. And that is unfortunate. After all, the point of most Halloween costume parties is that invitees make a frightening impact. There really is no point in dressing up as a fairy (unless one is a little girl) for Halloween.

That is where masks come in. Even if one does not have a terribly frightening costume, a scarily realistic Halloween mask could be your problem-solver. These days, manufacturers of Halloween masks take great care in creating very real-looking Halloween masks (if zombies and mummies can ever be made "life-like"). Earlier on, masks were commonly made with materials such as latex. These days, a large number of masks boast of being crafted out of silicon. This tends to make their textures a lot like human flesh.

Yes, the feeling of revulsion is normal when you have a very realistic Halloween clown mask with blood oozing out and flesh hanging down from the sides. But then, that is the point of getting dressed for Halloween! Often the point is to relive a horror story. If you are most scared of being bitten by a zombie, it should be lots of fun to wear a Halloween zombie mask while you go "trick or treating". Halloween masks help us become our own worst nightmares. Disguising ourselves takes on whole new meanings when Halloween comes around.
